City considers appeal to denial of records release

A GoFundMe fundraising effort has been established to help the Peréa-Roberson family cope with the challenges of dealing with the incident involving their child.

By Eileen Qiu

Tense pauses, stutters and silence fell over last Thursday's Legislative Matters Committee meeting as City Council members discussed the city seeking to overturn a ruling from the Public Records Office that will let parents acquire records for their child, who was accused of inappropriately touching a classmate.

Flavia Perea and Sean Robinson's son was accused of the act in 2019. They said they were entitled to the records according to the public documents attached to the meeting's agenda.

Perea and Robinson requested the report twice and were rejected by the city each time, citing "It's prohibited by law from releasing any incident report."

The parents reasoned in a letter from Supervisor of Records Rebecca Murray that there was no crime committed due to Continued on page 4

Shirley pop-up restaurant to have soft-opening at Bow Market

By Fernando Cervantes Jr.

Chef Kat Bayle has worked in kitchens from San Francisco to Slovenia to Paris. For almost a year now, Bayle has been running a weekly popup kitchen in restaurants around Somerville and now plans to do a soft opening.

Shirley, a pop-up kitchen, which was formerly known as Blueberries for Sal, is set for a soft opening on October 16 at Union Square's Bow Market.

According to Bayle, the pop-up revolves around locally sourced ingredients from near-

"The concept behind it is farm to table, so everything is super local and with farmers and producers and purveyors that I have a personal relationship with and have gotten to know in the past few years of living in New England," she said.

Bayle also spoke on her reasoning behind starting this project, citing a wish to Continued on page 4 Shirley pop-up kitchen owner/operator Chef Kat Bayle.

Response to: Remembering Gina Foglia

Heather Heimarck says:

How to commemorate a life such as Gina's? One so rich in interests, impact, and reach? I've decided to focus on her professional work in order to add to a collage of remembrances written by others that may begin to portray her dimensions. Gina was a year ahead of me at graduate school at Harvard's GSD (Graduate School of Design), she graduated in 1990. It was a time when the GSD was interested in translating architectural theory and modern art into landscape design and aesthetics. Gina held a bachelor of science from SUNY with a focus in fine arts and horticulture. Even then, Gina was interested in the messy bits; the lessons of the environmentalist movement; the integration of science, plant communities, and design; the facilitation of community process and sustainable, regenerative design long before these terms were mainstream and celebrated as they are today. Gina was swimming upstream and it didn't matter to her a bit. Her fearless unashamed approach, grounding her work in sustainable design, cradle to grave management of natural resources, harvesting and community advocacy (speaking truth to power) allowed her to build a career, professional practice and network around her convictions. As her fellow classmate, former business partner at Heimarck & Foglia, landscape architects and planners, long term collaborator and friend, I am so grateful for her deep commitment to her core values, great spirit and many contributions to building a better world for us to live in and foster. Gina gave freely but she also asked a lot of her friends, she wanted us all to be involved, to contribute our bit to the collective effort of helping one another, lending a hand, and stewardship. We honor her by being involved with our communities, one another, and the natural world....and she would have us always recycle and compost responsibly.

Joan Cergol says:

Sending my love, hugs and sympathies to the friends and family of Gina Foglia. I had the fortune of engaging Gina as a consultant to the Town of Huntington on an important project at our Huntington Station Gateway Park and community garden. Gina brought so much knowledge, expertise, passion, integrity and life to this mission in Huntington, and I am certain, to everything and everyone else she touched. We learned so much from Gina, and I was in particular awe of her professionalism and beautiful spirit in connecting with all types of people and processing and respecting opposing ideas. While I am heartbroken that Gina has been lost far too soon and so tragically, I take some solace in the knowledge that her legacy and special connection with people and nature will endure through her lasting contributions and through the continuing good work of the Foglia family, brother Larry and his lovely wife Heather (with whom I have also worked), among others. Larry was a driving force in the completion of Huntington Station's community garden, so it was so natural and fitting that his sister Gina stepped as well to assist in its ongoing development. I should add that I also enjoyed the privilege of working with Gina's (and Larry's) remarkable mom, Dinah, who was a legend in her own civic space here in Huntington. May Gina's and her mother Dinah's fine work and example light the way for generations to come.

Somerville High Class of 1960 Reunion

featuring guest writer Diane (DiNitto) Suffredini with her report on the SHS Class of 1960 Reunion.

The Class of 1960 started planning its reunion in September 2019. My husband, Peter Suffredini, and I, both 1960 graduates, have been spearheading these reunions for many years, with a constant committee since 1965, when the first one was held.

Without fail, a reunion has been held

One of the DJs in front of our "1960" balloons.

This week, I am every five years, except for this momentous one: The Class of "60" was about to have its "60th," but it got delayed because of the pandemic. Not to be deterred, we re-booked the reunion for 365 days later to September 24, 2021.

> During the extra 18 months, I did some heavy research and found many classmates whose addresses had changed through the years. As it turned out, four of these classmates attended their first reunion along with 102 more.

> Since the Class of '60 had to have a "60th," the program book with an awesome photo of the original/old high school on its cover was called Class of 1960 celebrates its 60th (plus one) Anniversary! The program book and much of the memento printing for the memorabilia table was designed and printed by another classmate, Patricia DeCillis Phillips.

> A great DJ, Alan Bella, got everyone motivated and many from the class participated in some fun dances including the Stroll! The men provided their rendition of YMCA, giving everyone a few laughs and the ladies performed a brilliant chorus line of the "new" Rockettes! Many friendships were renewed and a good time was had by all.

> Paul Murray, Class of 1960 President, a retired SHS teacher and building master, and now a member of the SHS Scholarship Fund, spoke about the campaign that had been held in 2019 to award Class of 1960 scholarships to the Class of 2020.

The Class of 1960 awarded three scholarships in the amount of $1960 each to three graduates in 2020 and another $1960 scholarship to a 2021 graduate. The Class of 1960 is already donating again towards awarding another scholarship to a deserving graduate(s) in 2022. This class has been unbelievably generous and caring in their donations to help another Somerville High graduate pursue his/her further education.

Many Class of 1960 classmates have stated how grateful they were for the great education they had received from Somerville High during their years there and how they wanted to help this generation.

The Class of 1960 is certainly unique in the way they have retained many friendships and continued with the reunions every five years. And Continued on page 13

Next Wave/Full Circle students talk with Katjana Ballantyne

The City Councilor and current mayoral candidate Katjana Ballantyne sat down for a conversation with Next Wave/Full Circle students Anthony Slocum, Christian Martinez, and Kurt Redgate. We reached out to Mr. Will Mbah for an interview but we couldn't find a time to meet that worked for both of us.

Anthony Slocum: How did you end up in Somerville?

KB: Great question. It was affordable, I had been living in Chelsea for five years and my housing situation changed. I was single, roommates and all that, and I moved to Winthrop for a year and a half, two years when the house had a fire and I got displaced. I lost everything and my friends let me sleep on their couch for three months here, two weeks there until I was able to find a place.

AS: Why do you want to be

KB: I think Somerville is at a pivotal time and I believe that our next mayor needs to have three key qualities. They need to embody the cultures and values of Somerville, like really believe in them. They should have an inclusive leadership style and they should have the skills and experience to be chief executive. I believe I best bring those three key qualities to the mayor's office.

I think we've worked on a lot of good progressive things in the last decade and I'd be honored to be able to do it. One other thing, I moved here in 1993, and why did I decide to stay in Somerville? I was born and orphaned in Greece and adopted there by my Scottish father, hence the name Ballantyne is Scottish and my Czech-German mother is eastern European.

We are a family of immigrants and we emigrated to the United States when I was four. I learned then that sometimes people are afraid of differences. It could be your accent, your food, or it could simply be your culture. So, it was always important to me to make sure that people are included and feel a part of it. I love the fact that you talk about a circle, and I always step back to make sure people are in the circle.

I'm Greek and I like to Greek dance, and if you notice about the Greeks, the Greeks like to line dance for the most part, but a curved line, so an open circle really, so they never close the circle. The idea is it's a metaphor that people should always feel that they can come into the circle. So, if you are Greek dancing or go down to the Greek festivals, they want anybody to show up. You don't have to be a couple, you know, you can be three, or five, or you can be one person. You know, you just join in on the dance.

So, when I moved to Somerville in '93, I saw a place that was changing. People were talking about things and using words like progressive. They were thinking in a way that I just had never experienced it in a community that I lived in. I felt comfortable here and I started to get involved, I volunteered. I love it here, it has been good to me, good to my family and those three key qualities are, I think, necessary. A mayor is an executive, not a legislator but an

And so, the skills that I have, I was the first and only one in my family to go to college. I worked two jobs and took out loans to get a bachelor's degree and an MBA so I have a master's degree in business. I have worked for over thirty years. I've worked for a dozen years in business and international supply chain management. I worked in some startups, but then I moved into the non-profit world. I worked for an affordable housing developer and also on the economic side, the work force side.

So, it was trying to connect local people to local jobs, making sure they had the skills and that they had career ladder opportunities. I use the word economic mobility so that If you're starting out and you're making twenty thousand or fifty thousand, in my mind you should be making a hundred thousand, two hundred thousand. There should be a step and a career ladder path for you. So, I also worked with community-based organizations in Boston to create green economy jobs, that was back in 2010.

So, we know that climate change is real, how do we make sure that the work force and the people working have the skills to work in solar, work in wind as we try to move away from fossil fuel. For five years I was executive director of a violence prevention non-profit for at risk girls. I've been on the city council seven and a half years and twice elected city council president. So, my vision Continued on page 6 try something new due to the COVID-19 pandemic shutting most of society down.

"I started because it was something I have been thinking about doing for quite a while and I think everybody's world got turned kind of upside down due to the pandemic. I wound up having some more time and space to do something like this," she said.

After about a year of operating with irregular hours, the restaurant is now transitioning to a more stable schedule, opening six days a week at Bow Market.

"Everything is shifting with the seasons and shifting with the COVID, the newest part of it has been transitioning to Bow Market," Bayle said, "I've been there through the summer and will be there six days a week, starting in October."

According to Bayle, the reception from the community has been very positive, with some regulars coming to her various pop-up dinners regularly.

"It's been great, so I've had some people who have been following me since the very beginning and have literally come to every single sit-down dinner that I do," she said.

Transitioning to a permanent schedule at Bow Market will bring its benefits, not only for the operation as a whole but also for guests that have been wanting to visit the pop-up kitchen for a while. "So, I think for guests that's going to be nice, and then for me too, that I'll be in the same place doing the same sort of menu for five to six days a week," Bayle said.

When asked why people should stop by and visit the kitchen, she emphasized the central role local ingredients play in the running of the kitchen. "I think because it's super local, that's one of the central concepts. Is that the ingredients I'm getting are super local and super seasonal and I'm also trying to be really welcoming to all dietary situations," Bayle said.

Shirley will begin service at Bow Market on October 16, with service six days a week beginning on October 19.

Developer, residents, city planners negotiate zoning for Boynton Yards gateway

By Joe Creason

On Tuesday, Sept. 28, a joint hearing of the Land Use Committee and Planning Board was held. Members of the of the public were given the opportunity to speak, with each speaker having up to two minutes to give their opinion on the various agenda items being discussed at the forum.

Ward 3 Councilor Ben Ewand Michael en-Campen Capuano chaired the Land Use Committee and Planning Board respectively.

Zoning with regards to the Boynton Yards gateway project near Webster Avenue and Columba Street, has been a long developing issue for the Planning Board and Land Use Committee.

The project proponent and developer, CV Properties, has engaged in productive discussions around the zoning of 80 Webster with a compromise solution that would satisfy the needs of all parties, says President of CV Properties Richard Galvin.

"It was a good back and forth, I think everyone gets a little bit of what they wanted and I want to commend the city for facilitating that discussion. We look forward to hopefully delivering the jobs and community needs of Somerville with this project," Galvin said.

Representatives from the group Concerned Residents of 80 Webster felt a little dif-

"We have indicated that the nine-story height limit is our preferred direction for this project," said Rodger Levi from Concerned Residents of 80 Webster.

According to Levi, Concerned Residents of 80 Webster have not received a signed agreement from CV Properties to move forward with this specific plan.

"Regarding the extension of high-rise zoning to the western portion of the block north of Beach Avenue and South of Columbia Street, we cannot support that at this time because we have not concluded a signed agreement," Levi said.

Levi remains cautiously optimistic that they will be able to reach an agreement in the future. The resident organization is disappointed at this time by the fact that a high-rise zoning destination remains on the section of the 80 Webster block which is south of the Boynton gateway site, Levi says.

"In all of the draft ordinances through the redoing process in December 2019, up until this late summer version of the draft ordinances, that entire block was zoned mid-rise five. It was only rezoned as high-rise in the penultimate draft, and there was no public notification of this change and no attention draw to this," Levi said.

According to Levi, the residents of 80 Webster believe that the southern portion of the block should remain midrise five due to potential effects on the community and quality of life.

"Overall, I would like to thank CV properties and the city planning staff for working on with us on this," Levi said.

In a public communication from the City Clerk's Office, 18 registered voters requested the adoption of a zoning map amendment to change the zoning district around 51 Mc-Grath Highway from high-rise to mid-rise five, and the zoning district around 35 McGrath Highway from mid-rise five to mid-rise four.

Comments from the public on this agenda item, ranged from opposition to support for the registered voters' request.

"As residents who are having to deal with the implications of zoning, we are sympathetic to the residents in the Mc-Grath-Brick Bottom area," Levi said.

Seth Horowitz, a resident at 12 Maple Avenue, says that he is sympathetic to the needs of artists and creatives that may live in the area. However, Horowitz says the presence of high-rise housing units within five minutes walking distance of the soon to be Green Lin Extension station, will help Somerville transition away from a car dependent society.

"I tried to understand the concerns that those residents have, but it sounded to me like the main concern was the casting of shadows in that area. That argument to me, shadows on the one hand versus building to city I a climate resilient way, makes it hard for me to support down zoning from a high-rise to a mid-rise," Horowitz said.

As this was a public hearing, committees did not give a final deliberation on the issue.

A following Land Use Committee meeting would be held on Oct. 5.

'We Are Somerville' art installation unveiled at Assembly Row

Assembly Row and the Somerville Arts Council are thrilled to unveil a collaborative art project at Assembly Row titled We Are Somerville. This art installation takes the form of three giant vertical banners, which feature portraits of people who live and/or work in Somerville. Collectively, these intimate yet bold portraits by local photographer Kristen Joy Emack convey the personality and diversity of Somerville. The banners adorn a facade along Great River Road and face the Mystic River and the Orange Line.

"These portraits capture what makes our city great – diversity and inclusion," said Mayor Joseph A. Curtatone. "By looking at these smiling faces, it's a powerful reminder that everyone is welcome here in Somerville."

"We're excited to have yet another art installation at Assembly Row," said David Middleton, Assembly Row General Manager. "Somerville is a town renowned for its artists and creative output, so as far as we're concerned, the more art the better. It conveys who we are as a city."

The Somerville Arts Council and Assembly Row look forward to a continued partnership as the murals, art installations, and art space projects at Assembly Row continue to grow. Expect art tours later this fall or spring.

equitable city where we can all thrive together.

AS: What is one change that you will make?

KB: Well, I want to continue to work on the things I've been working on for my adult life and they're interrelated. It's on affordability, and affordability is really layered, it's complex.

So, I want to make sure that there is housing here and that we as a city can use every tool possible. So, some laws we can make, other laws we can't because there are state laws and maybe in some areas, federal laws. But we can use every tool possible, whether it is incentivizing developers to make more affordable housing, or to make sure that there is more family housing, three bedrooms or more so we make sure there are families who stay here.

Whether it is on the jobs end, there is so much construction going on around us and it took 31 years between building office buildings. So, right now the businesses that exist here tend to be more food service and that is wonderful. If you don't want to do food service, what else can you do?

Right, so the point would be to give people who live here now an opportunity for jobs. So, what am I going to do? The main thing is to work on the affordability. But how do you get jobs? We have to make sure that we're attracting the right kind of jobs. So, it gives career opportunity to the people who live here now. Then they also get first preference to those jobs.

Then also, when you are managing the city, you have to make sure that the expenses that you have, you have money coming in that pays for it. That primarily comes in from office-commerof Somerville is an inclusive, cial. So, we don't make money on residential houses, it isn't a net positive but net negative. That means it costs the city more to deliver services then the revenue and taxes we get for it. So where do you get, then, the money to fill that gap? You get it from commercial buildings, office buildings, they are the ones that help us to be able to fund building a new high school.

> Christian Martinez: What is the future of policing in Somerville?

> KB: Wow, well what do you want the future of policing to look like? So, I have been known for my inclusive leadership style, so what does that mean? It means that I try to make sure that all voices are heard at the table. That you get best practices, you get data, so you get information so it's not just people's opinions because sometimes people's opinions might not be based on fact. It'll be based on their personal experience.

> So, we want to figure out what's the best practices. In the city of Somerville, as a City Councilor, we asked, with the community and with public safety in mind, we said we would hire a Racial Social Justice Director. Her name is Denise Molina Capers, she's been working with us for about six months now. She would host community meetings that would also include the community voices. She talks with public safety people and she talks with the community. She uses data and research, see what other communities around the country are doing to come up with what we want to see here in Somerville.

> So, I think we have to finish that process, it has to be an inclusive process. I think there are creative ways to handle things which Somerville has been doing a little bit. We have a department within the Somerville Police called COHR, Community Outreach Health Recovery. So, if someone is having a mental health issue, we have five social workers on staff that come and help calm down the situation. And then, they'd redirect that person to all these non-profits and social workers and hospitals that are supports for people with mental health, or maybe drug addiction issues. So that the first step should not be that you're arrested, it should be to get the right help for the person.

Right now, the safety net falls to the police because that's the number to call. But the discussion is, should that fall to the police? Should there be another number, 511? Should there be a system set up? The interesting thing about public safety is you don't know what else is going on with an individual, and you don't know when the balance is of will something escalate into something that is unsafe? So that's the challenge and that is the problem to deconstruct and figure out what would a structure look like. If a social worker is going to respond to something like that and it turns quickly, are we putting them in harm's way?

CM: What plans do you have for programming for younger

KB: I am really happy you asked this question. I think there should be more programming for middle schoolers. I think there should be programming in a way that you have experiences and not necessarily based on academics. It should be based on trying something new outside of your culture, your neighborhood.

It might be that one little idea that puts you on a pathway to something new. I want to go back to the idea of inclusive leadership because I think there should be more investment at the middle school ages but I would be asking for your feedback, ideas driven by youth. I think it is important and we need to deliver more on progressive values and make sure your voices are heard.

When I was City Council President I actually invited in students. I invited them to sit at the podium and I told them 'I want them to know that this is your place too.' They were able to see how the legislative process works. I really feel that city hall is everybody's space, I call it the people's chamber. People should feel comfortable walking around there and understanding what all the different offices do.

CM: What new projects will you start on?

KB: We have an assessment of what our city office needs are, and we have fire houses in different areas, all those buildings need to be assessed. We need to determine what has to be done to make sure they are in a healthy condition. So, we need to look at the buildings we own and how we can make sure we have a consistent maintenance plan, as maintenance isn't always put into the budget.

Kurt Redgate: What will be your biggest challenge as mayor?

KB: Right now, we are at a pivotal time, a lot of things are happening at the same time. We have new construction, we need to attract more businesses to come in because as I said before, the residential taxes don't pay for the things we deliver on. So, we need to have commercial buildings to help with that.

I don't know if this is really a challenge or if we need to prioritize everything and decide which one needs to get done first. We are going to get federal money, infrastructure money, that will come to us in installments and we have five years to use it. I think one of the biggest challenges might be when dealing with our physical assets, like there is a lot of flooding that goes on in Gilman Square. That causes a lot of damage to the houses that are there.

So, it is getting all of those projects done at the same time. So, the businesses that are here, they wanted to be here. I asked the executives at Puma at the groundbreaking, why Somerville? And they said they surveyed their employees, and they could have gone to the Seaport district in Boston but their employees wanted to be here.

So, I say that if your employees want to be here then we have to make sure that we bring them in and meet the people so we help out and take care of one another, provide opportunities, build relationships.

KR: How long do you want to KB: Hmmm, not 18 years, we'll see. I am not afraid of change, change always provides some opportunity and it also gives other people an opportunity to step up. One thing that I've learned, having worked with youth while I was an executive director of Girls Leap in Boston is that there are just some really thoughtful and dedicated people.

I have faith in humanity, I have faith in youth. Sometimes I am around young people and I think, "Wow, they are so impressive!" So, it will be someone else's turn. You can't get anything done in two years, or even four years, you need a few more sessions after that.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Our View Of The Times

Finally, sensible regulations on leaf blowers enacted.

After more than a year of study and debate, the Somerville City Council has passed a new ordinance that sets guidelines for when and how leaf blowers may be used within the city

Many have felt annoyed with a neighbor or contracted groundskeeper running one of these contraptions either at inappropriate times – such as weekend mornings when one hopes to sleep in a little longer in the morning – or upwind of us as we hope to breathe some fresh air while we enjoy the outdoors whenever we wish to.

Let's face it, these things can be loud and the environmental impact of the noise they generate can't be ignored.

The ordinance restricts the use of leaf blowers to certain days and times. Specifically, the following general guidelines have been established: Lawn care businesses that want to use leaf blowers in Somerville must submit an operations plan to the City's Inspectional Services Department (ISD) for approval before using leaf blowers.

Leaf blowers may only be used March 15 through May 31 and October 1 through December 15 between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Leaf blowers may not be used on Sundays or municipal holidays, with certain exceptions as outlined in the ordinance.

When in use, leaf blowers should be set to the lowest setting needed to complete the job.

Violating the leaf blower ordinance could result in a fine of $300 per violation. Visit somervillema.gov/leafblowers to learn more about Somerville's new leaf blower ordinance.

City to hold flu vaccination clinics

The City of Somerville has set up two free flu vaccination clinics for residents in October that will be open by appointment. Additional dates will be added through the fall and winter and will be posted on somervillema.gov/flu. Residents are strongly encouraged to get the vaccine to protect their health as well as to support the community's efforts to lessen the impacts of both influenza and the coronavirus.

Flu clinics are for Somerville community members ages 3 and up, with or without health insurance. As a coronavirus safety measure, attendees must make an appointment in advance so that staff can safely manage the flow of those seeking vaccinations (sign up information is below). City flu clinics offer both the high dose flu vaccine for persons 65 and older and the regular dose flu vaccine for those under 65.

FLU CLINIC DETAILS & SCHEDULE

Before you go:

Pre-registration at somervillema.gov/flu is required for all City flu clinics. Be sure to select "Flu vaccine (influenza)" when scheduling your appointment. If you need assistance or language support in any language to sign up, please call 311 (617-666-3311). For all clinics, face coverings must be worn. Those who have health coverage should bring their insurance cards (including MassHealth and Medicare) with them, but the vaccines are free to all Somerville residents regardless of whether they have insurance.

Flu vaccine clinic schedule:

Wednesday, October 13 at the East Somerville Community School at 50 Cross St. from 3:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m, Saturday, October 23 at the Somerville Public Library West Branch at 40 College Ave. from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Other providers: Local pharmacies also offer free flu vaccinations, and residents may also seek flu vaccinations from their medical provider.

Additional dates will be added later this fall and winter. Check somervillema. gov/flu for additional dates, and to receive updates please sign up for City alerts by all delivery means possible (phone, email, and text) at www.somervillema. gov/alerts. Alerts are sent in five languages (English, Spanish, Portuguese, Haitian Creole, and Nepali).

Flu vaccines reduce the risk of serious flu-related illness, hospitalization, and death. The best time to get a flu vaccine is between late September and early November. There is potential for an early and severe flu season due to the relaxed pandemic safety measures and the population's reduced immunity to the flu after months of social distancing. Getting your flu shot now can help reduce the spread of the flu virus and the burden on the healthcare system during the coronavirus pandemic.

Residents can now view real estate tax bills, water and sewer bills, and personal property tax bills online, in real time, 24/7. CSS also allows residents to see official City records and check their payment history directly, and it links to City Hall Systems, the City's online payment vendor, enabling easy payment access that is safe, secure, and free of charge if a checking account is used as the payment method.

HONK! festival of activist street bands returns

The 16th annual HONK! Festival returns to the streets for one day only this Saturday, October 9, with its signature spirit of joy and justice in a new, hyperlocal format.

This year's festival will feature multiple neighborhood events cosponsored by grassroots community organizations across Greater Boston. Throughout the day, HONK! performers will join activist groups in their own neighborhoods, playing music and raising awareness for arts and social justice causes. More than 15 local brass and percussion bands will take to parks, squares, and street corners across Somerville, Boston, Cambridge, and Chelsea.

The day kicks off at 10:30 a.m. in Somerville's Seven Hills Park with a performance by the Second Line Brass Band and tributes to Mayor Joseph A. Curtatone and Somerville Olympian Phil Reavis, Sr. The Uncivil Servants, a new band featuring Mayor Curtatone and City of Somerville staffers, will play later in the evening.

All events are free and open to the public. Performances will also be livestreamed on the HONK! YouTube channel. The full schedule and streaming link are available at honkfest.org.

The Somerville Times Historical Fact of the Week

The Great Fire

By Bob (Monty) Doherty

This week is Fire Prevention Week. Its annual observance is the week in which October 9 falls and has been celebrated at this time since 1922. The reason for this date is the remembrance of a conflagration, the Great Chicago Fire of October 8 and 9, 1871.

It was the worst fire in American history until September 11, 2001. Killing over 250 people, this fire destroyed over 17,000 structures and burned over 200 acres. Amazingly and coincidentally, on the same day, the most devastating forest fire in American history was raging in Wisconsin. Because of the losses of the internationally popular city of Chicago, the Peshtigo, Wisconsin fire was forgotten, despite the fact that it took over 1,200 lives, five towns and 1.2 million acres.

1871 was such a fire wake-up call across America, you would think it would never be repeated, but you would be wrong. Exactly thirteen months later, on November 8 and 9, 1872, Boston experienced its great fire. It destroyed 776 buildings in two days, covering over sixty-five acres of downtown property before it was extinguished. Fourteen lives were lost, seven of which were firefighters.

The main reason for the rapid spread of fire was lack of horsepower. Street activity came to a standstill because at that time all modes of transportation were horse driven. A plague, the Epizootic Plague, which at that time only affected horses, existed for weeks before and crippled almost all metropolitan horses, Somerville's included.

Imagine! Everyone knows the recent affect Market Basket's problem had on many in the city. Can you envision Somerville suddenly having no access to trucks, cars, cabs, buses or mail? Help came by railway from as far away as Worcester and Portsmouth, New Hampshire. Like many other towns, the entire Somerville Fire Department responded early on, working in the Winthrop Square section for over twenty hours, protecting that area as best they could.

Historical Fact

citizens were lost. Edward Revere Curtis of Somerville was the great grandson of Paul Revere. He was born on February 22, 1822, Washington's birthday and the year that Boston became a city. He was a Common Council Member and a Somerville Alderman for years. His type-print foundry on Congress Street punctuated the end of the conflagration. It was the last building burned.

Gunpowder from the Charlestown Navy Yard and the Boston Army Base was used to make a fire block to the oncoming flames and stopped it long enough for extinguishment by the fire fighters. Help came from all around Boston. Because of the horse plague, the heavy fire engines had to be manually hauled up to 12 miles before putting a drop of water on the inferno. Scores of businesses were lost and hundreds of buildings destroyed.

This event could not be forgotten, and Colonel Russell Conwell of Somerville made it so by capturing its memories and witnessed accounts in his 1873 book, History of the Great Fire in Boston.

Today, memories of these three terrible fires should make us all more safety conscious. So, when you set your clocks back next month, check your smoke detectors. Who knows, you might even prevent a conflagration.

Supermoon

(for George Adam Harper)

Not the fat mandala the meteorologists were touting on the news but a dime-sized jewel floating beneath us in the pond's black skies which my grandson, nearly two, snatches up in his small fist. Opening it slowly - convinced of what he possesses, and by what he's possessed - he offers me his wet palm. I kiss the moon there.

'& Company' by Moira Linehan

& Company By Moira Linehan Dos Madres Press www.dosmadres.com Dos Madres Press Loveland, Ohio ISBN: 978-1-953252-14-2 76 Pages

Review by Off the Shelf Correspondent Dennis Daly

Elegant beyond elegance. Moira Linehan stitches together a palimpsest biography of her mother's mother, Marie Louise Raimbault Wacha, a nonpareil seamstress and dress designer. Based on very little hard information, Linehan conjures up backdrops, insights, and probable artistic techniques used by her grandmother. She does this by incorporating period art in an ekphrastic approach that uncovers the extraordinary will and likely contours of a magnificent lady. Wacha's life spanned the late nineteenth century and the early twentieth century. The urban textile centers of Paris and Boston nurtured her.

In her well-wrought and telling sonnet, Ars Poetica, Linehan wonderfully describes the raw labor and hidden subtleties necessary in constructing a dress and, metaphorically, any serious artwork. Here she lists some of the basics,

...The planning beforehand. Washing washable textiles to shrink them before they're sewn. Laying out the pattern so the design flows, the plaid lines match, the dress drapes. Shears sharp so the seams won't pucker, twist, ravel. The seamstress's stress

Then the fitting, the pinning and re-pinning those seams. Right shade of thread? The sewing, seemingly magic, not one stitch visible. Each seam, steam-pressed flat till at last the sewn carries material and a dressmaker's vision out into the world...

In the first of three stage-setting poems entitled Addressing the History, Linehan interweaves economic history and art history. For instance, she details the domino effect of new fashion trends and how they took her grandmother's world by storm, under it all, the corset. At first, just working to narrow the waist, set off by jackets with wide shoulders, with bodice seams, darts, braiding, rows of buttons, maybe striped textiles, all verging in a V at the waist. Not how tiny. Then corsets lengthened to an hourglass. As that century's second half starts, ten thousand workers in Paris produce those corsets. The year the American Civil War begins, over one million are sold there. Dressmakers are talking to salesmen, salesmen to weavers. Soon bolts of cloth come with borders woven in for hemlines, for cuffs. Soon the new fashion journals, then department stores carry patterns, instructions for assembling skirts and dresses...

Mary Cassatt captures the subtle art of dressmaking in her brilliant drypoint and aquatint painting The Fitting (circa 1891). Linehan mines this piece for its historic value in relation to her grandmother. The image portrayed contrasts a graceful and stylish standing woman with her attentive, sitting (almost kneeling) seamstress, who is wearing a simple brown garb. The standing woman is doubled by a full-length mirror. In her poem of the same name Linehan draws out, not only some of her grandmother's essence, but also a temperament and social position. Here's part of her description,

... She's sitting on a low stool, her back to the viewer, seams of her back bodice on display. The center seam: pattern placed so two strips of those four black lines get stitched together at the neckband, leaving three lines each side. But not just stitched. Fitted, so narrowing to only three lines total at her waist. Likewise, from left shoulder and right, strips of black lines, taken in by darts. Each side of that center seam, mirror of the other.

Another painting Linehan uses to great effect is Edmund Tarbell's Girl, Crocheting (1904). The girl pictured seems content in her work, work that exists only in shadow. The artist even vanishes the girl's face into shadow. A large portrait on the wall, however, leaves no doubt as to Pope Innocent's identification and imposing figure. Linehan employs the grand pope as a figure of contrast with the contentedness of the crocheter, and both of them as a contrast to a new century and the impending revolution centering on the modern woman. The poet's consideration of Tarbell's portrait (copied from Velazquez) of Pope Innocent leads directly to a consideration of the breakout,

His waist-length cape, signature vermillion satin, drapes in a V over a long surplice, its wide hem of fine lace. Some claim it's the greatest portrait painter's greatest portrait, this pope by Velazquez, more or less a contemporary of Vermeer. Tarbell, suggesting he has a foot in both those schools. Tarbell, of the Boston school. Yet within the world Of this art: all the unnamed. Nuns working bobbins By window light, making lace for bishops' vestments. Women of Vermeer's Delft about their daily lives. This Girl in a long dark skirt, seemingly content to crochet in shadow. She, a weir for Tarbell, holding back the new century, those women marching.

Clues here and there suggest that Linehan's grandmother, Maria, did quite well financially. Her poem, Getting My Grandmother to Boston notes that Maria's tailor-husband was offered and accepted a managerial job with Boston's largest manufacturing plant of woman's fashions. Three years later he opened Jules Wacha & Company on Boylston Street. With these bare facts the poet's (now well-schooled) imagination fills in the blanks,

So I decide to give her, as the "& Company," part of Jules Wacha & Company, the task of overseeing its books as she oversaw the finances of their home at 4 Zamora Street in Jamaica Plain, my mother having told me she grew up with servants—maids, housekeepers, cooks, and gardeners—my grandmother keeping from her husband (as my mother would) such bothersome details...

This lovely book of artistic investigation concludes, not only with the reversal of her grandmother's erasure, but also, revelations of the poet's own craft and the intense, unforgotten influence of a mother's love.
